Overview

How do incentives and financing structures affect commercial solar energy?

Incentives and financing structures may apply differently depending on where the electricity is generated versus consumed and whether PV systems are located on- or off-site. Another potential issue for commercial consumers is whether or not they own the property where they wish to site a solar energy system.

How does solar financing work?

As the solar PV market in the United States has evolved, so too have the financing mechanisms associated with it. Third-party ownership (TPO) models, which include power purchase agreements (PPAs) and leases, in addition to loans and cash purchases, are the historical mainstays of the solar financing spectrum.

Who participates in the financing of solar projects?

Developers, independent power producers, solar panel manufacturers, engineering, procurement, and construction (“EPC”) contractors, utility companies, financial investors and, more recently, commercial and industrial end-users all participate in the financing of solar projects in different manners and at different times.

What financing options are available for solar?

There are several additional solar financing or purchasing options that may be available in certain markets, some of which can be used in conjunction with the mechanisms presented in the previous section. Bond financing.

What is an on-site power purchase agreement (PPA)?

On-Site Power Purchase Agreement (PPA): Physical PPA Description On-site PPAs can be considered “physical” PPAs, because the electricity production is tied to the consumer’s meter, directly reducing the amount of electricity purchased from the utility (Figure B-2).

What are the potential tradeoffs for solar consumers under a TPO arrangement?

B-7 REC ownership is another potential tradeoff for solar consumers under a TPO arrangement. TPOs typically retain ownership of and monetize RECs associated with the solar project.
