Overview

A trademark is a name, symbol, or mark that distinguishes a product or brand from other products or brands. By extension, it can also be used to describe something that's characteristic to a person or thing in a more metaphorical way, such as "the singer's trademark rhythm." The word trademark, first recorded in the.

If trademarks were basketball, the ® superscript symbol would be the NBA and ™ would be the pickup games at your local gym. The ® on a product means that it's a registered trademark.

Another capital letter in a circle protects the actual product, idea, or work just like how ® protects a logo, name, or slogan: the copyright symbol, or ©. A copyright is the right to make copies.

A service mark is similar to a ™ trademark in that it's an unregistered designation, but it refers to services (as the name suggests) rather than a product or good. Blue Cross and Blue Shield, American Express, and Planned.

The letters (T) and (M) are sometimes seen paired in an attempt to emulate the trademark symbol. Methods include • (TM), the letters in normal form, enclosed in parentheses • TM, the letters written in , on the
