Ventyx energy Venezuela

Overview

Did ABB buy Ventyx?

ABB triples its exposure to energy software markets by purchasing Ventyx. ABB announced today that it has agreed to acquire Ventyx for more than $1 billion from Vista Equity Partners. Ventyx, which provides software to the utility industry, was rumored to be shopping around for a buyer.

What can Ventyx do for You?

One of Ventyx's key applications allows utilities to match up electricity generation with consumption down to the household level in real time, which will be essential for any carbon-trading scheme. It also provides load forecasting software that can be used to integrate renewable energy onto the grid and facilitate demand response.

What happened to Ventyx?

Ventyx is the culmination of several mergers and acquisitions in the past few years. In December 2006, Vista Equity Partners acquired Indus and merged it with its property MDSI; the company was rebranded as Ventyx in 2007. Later that year, Ventyx acquired Global Energy Decisions and NewEnergy Associates, followed by Tech-Assist, Inc. in early 2008.

Ventyx Energy Deal Commentary

The acquisition of Ventyx () by ABB () announced on May 5, has the look of a bellwether deal in the energy and environment sector. This all cash deal at $1B, a 4X TTM revenue multiple, is excellent and should inspire other sellers to test the market.
